

THE MACMILLAN COMPANY'S NEW BOOKS.

The Story of Gladstone's Life.

By Justin McCarthy, M. P.,

AUTHOR OF

"A History of Our Own Times," "The Four Georges," etc.

Illustrated With Portraits of Mr. Gladstone and Many Other Prominent Men.

The long period which Mr. McCarthy has spent as a member of the House of Commons, eye-witness of part of the story he tells, the long nights of research and preparation for, and also the later work of writing his "History of Our Own Times," in which Mr. Gladstone has been so prominent a figure, have fitted Mr. McCarthy as no other man has been prepared to tell the story, which is not only that of a man's life, but of his country's political life, so closely have the two interests been combined for these many years.

It is sixty-four years or more since the handsome young Oxford graduate was suddenly called home from Italy to enter Parliament, and to take a prominent place from almost the very first. As an Under Secretary whose chief was in the House of Lords, it fell upon him to answer all questions relating to the Colonial Department. Yet about this time Disraeli prophesied that the young man "had no future before him," failing to recognize his coming antagonist in a long fight of a quarter of a century's duration.

THE LETTERS OF ELIZABETH BARRETT BROWNING.

Edited by FREDERIC G. KENYON.

With Biographical Additions, Portraits, Etc.

This collection of Mrs. Browning's letters has been prepared in the conviction that lovers of English literature will be glad to make a closer and more intimate acquaintance with one—or, it may be truthfully said, with two—of the most interesting literary characters of the Victorian age. It is a selection from a large mass of letters, written at all periods in Mrs. Browning's life, which Mr. Browning after his wife's death reclaimed from the friends to whom they had been written, or from their representatives. The letters passed into the possession of his son, Mr. R. Barrett Browning, with whose consent they are now published. Miss Browning, the poet's sister, to whom many of the letters are addressed, has also freely consented to their publication.

In this collection are comprised the letters to Miss Browning, Mr. H. S. Boyd, Mrs. Martin, Miss Mitford, Mrs. Jameson, Mr. John Kenyon, Mr. Chorley, Miss Blagden, Miss Haworth, and Miss Thomson (Madame Emil Braun). To these have been added a number of letters which have been kindly lent by their possessors for the purpose of the present volumes.

The duties of the editor have been mainly those of selection and arrangement; but, in order to complete the record, it has been thought well to add connecting links of narrative, which should serve to bind the whole together into the unity of a biography which covers Mrs. Browning's life from the time of her girlhood to her latest years.

The Old Santa Fe Trail.

By Col. Henry Inman,
Late of the U. S. Army.

Illustrated by Frederick Remington.

The book is one of unusual interest, especially to those who knew the States west of the Mississippi in the time of the stage coach, to say nothing of the "prairie schooner," or the even earlier pack-mule and train. Colonel Inman has added to a long personal experience of life on the plains unusual opportunities of hearing the traditions of the trail; he has known and talked with all of the best known scouts and hunters, and from the richest of their experience his book is full. Kit Carson, Buffalo Bill, Old Jim Bridger, and many another contribute to the often thrilling, sometimes amusing, always intensely interesting story.

A Map of the Trail.

CORLEONE.

A New Novel by

F. MARION CRAWFORD.

Completing the Saracinesca Series.

We should claim for him the very highest rank among American novelists had he never written anything but Corleone.

The mere story is of absorbing interest, and possesses the transcendent merit that even a blase and veteran reviewer is altogether unable to foresee the conclusion. And yet the sequence of events is of absolute necessity, following one upon the heels of the other with that inevitability which in itself betokens the hand of the master workman.

He has rendered an important service to social science, in addition to creating one of the strongest and most delightful novels of our century.—The Bookman.
